A possible explanation of this finding is that the ordinary BIB score is based on ICD-10 and a relatively small number of major diagnoses. A score that includes only ICPC-2 diagnoses is more informative and more suitable for patients with ICD-10-based comorbidity. The sensitivity and specificity of the original BIB total score were 80 % in case of high BIB categories \[@CR26\]. The sensitivity and specificity of the ICD-10-based BIB score were over 90 % in all categories \[@CR16\]. Further studies are needed to explore the internal and external validity of this instrument, particularly with respect to the validity and feasibility of using the BIB for ambulatory care. Currently, the ICD-10-based BIB with a cut-off of 8 as recommended by Fisher-Hoch et al. \[@CR16\] was used to measure frailty in the present study. In addition, a detailed inspection of the comorbidity information is needed to clarify whether the clinical diagnosis can be used as an indicator for the overall comorbidity burden in the ICD-10-based BIB. A limitation of this study is that the study population consisted of patients aged 50 years or older who visited an academic primary care clinic, which might not be representative for the entire population. A further study to validate the BIB for use in older adults is recommended. To conclude, the BIB was developed as a measure to identify frailty in primary care. This instrument can be used to measure frailty in both the primary and ambulatory care. Furthermore, by integrating the BIB into the electronic patient record, the frailty status of an individual can be communicated to patients as easily as any other laboratory result or medication prescription. The authors thank all respondents for their cooperation. Conflict of interest {#d30e2662} ===== Klaus J.M. de Boer and Charlotte van den Berg declare that they have no conflict of interest.
